RED WINE CAUSES RED BLOOD TO FLOW

Milo Guidi shot and killed George Allen, an indian, early last Saturday morning. The killing grew out of a drunken row and the stories told by the witnesses differ so greatly that it is hard to get a line on the facts. At any rate the indian is dead and buried and Guidi is languishing in jail suffering from three bad knife cuts which he claims that the deceased inflicted.

The witnesses to the affair were an old Italian called Florodora, Ed Beef and Nora, both indians. The part of the story that is not disputed is that they were drinking wine which was furnished by Guidi. It also seems that Nora was at Guidi's house and that Beef and Allen went there with a guitar and violin. Guidi says that Allen refused to pay for the wine and that an argument followed in which he was cut. He then shot Allen with a shotgun.

After the shooting Guidi went to the Mendocino state hospital to have word sent in to the authorities. The indian witnesses claim that Guidi must have cut himself with his own knife but those who know anything about the actions of an indian witness on the stand are a little skeptical.

M'GIMSEY VICTIM OF HIS OWN HAND

The remains were taken to Willits and from there to Boonville where the funeral was held Sunday. He had been in this city the day before and it is reported that he went home to try and effect a reconciliation with his wife.

KING FISHER NAME OF THE NEW UKIAH CIGAR

The new bit Fisher cigar will be known as a "King Fisher," this name having been selected by the judges after pondering for two days over the list of one hundred and five names submitted to them. It was found that four contestants had submitted this name and so the $10 was divided equally among them. The winners of the prizes were: E V D Paul, E P Shore and Walter Jones of Ukiah and Frank Strong of Calpella.

The judges selected by the contestants were Frank Sandelin, Frank Wilson and W O White. The judges decided that the name should not be over two words as this form of name seems to be the most convenient for advertising purposes. It was next decided that some combination embracing the word Fisher would be the most suitable. Several contestants had submitted the name "The King Fisher" but this was not accepted as it was more than two words.

As soon as the name was selected Mr Fisher telegraphed to his box company and commenced making up the cigars. In a few days he will have the new brand on the market. The judges and a number of his friends who have been presented with samples of the new brand pronouuce it one of the best smokes on the market.

ELECTRICAL PLANT IS FOR SALE CHEAP

The city fathers have decided to dispose of the old electric light plant and have advertised the machinery for sale in several of the leading electrical journals. The plant cost the town about $12,000 but the town would dispose of it for a great deal less—in fact it will be a clearance sale. If any neighboring town wants to install a fullfledged electric plant at a very reasonable price now is the time. As electric machinery is being improved all the time the old machinery has decreased in value. The current that is being secured from the Snow Mountain company has given such good service that it has been decided that the old plant is no longer needed as an auxiliary.

Mrs Stanfield is preparing to open her store in the building recently occupied by Hurd & Patten, during the coming week. She will have a complete stock of books, magazines, candies, etc., and the finest assortment of postal cards ever displayed in town.

Mrs Pemberton was down from Willits this week visiting her parents, Mr and Mrs F F Heacock.

Awful Mares Nest Found by Sanford

In a recent issue of the Call there appeared an article in which the transaction of the state purchasing 60 acre of land from the Vineyard Association was given prominence owing to the fact that a bill is before the legislature now to get an appropriation of $9000, for this purpose and it was strongly intimated that the price was exorbitant and that the deal could not be carried through except by the connivance of certain state officers and particularly referred to the fact that John McNab was a stockholder in the Vineyard Association and also a director of the Mendocino hospital.

A reporter of the Press called the attention of Poage and Ford, the Agents of the Bartlett Tract, to the article above mentioned and Mr Poage of that firm stated that the facts of the matter were that the Vineyard Association of which his firm was the exclusive agent, purchased about 200 acres of land from Bartlett Bros adjoining the lands of the Mendocino hospital on the west and across which the sewer line of the hospital runs. That during the fall of 1908 his firm sold about half of these lands in 10 and 20 acres tracts at about $200 per acre for cash and was proceeding in the sale from the west side of the tract to the east when they were requested by officers of the Mendocino state hospital to give the state an option, till the legislature met, on the eastern side of the place where there is a stream of water that belongs to the land and near which runs the sewer above mentioned. That the state wanted the water to flush its sewer as the supply from the hospital was deficient and a stench was troubling the health as well as the sensibilities of the neighbors and some were threatening legal proceedings. That the sale of these lands was then stopped and although several parties want the land and one party wanted to purchase the water they declined to consider the matter till after the legislature met and the state was given an opportunity to buy about 60 acres of the land and the water for $150 per acre or $9000 in all.

Mr Poage stated that in his opinion the price was fair and that the water right alone was worth more than the amount at which the land had been offered to the state and that the owners of the land would not consider selling the water without they sold the land as the two should go together and the state needed both as their sewer crossed the land and the water could easily be turned into the sewer, and when it run through the sewer, could be again utilized to irrigate the alfalfa on the state dairy farm. He further stated that his firm had had nothing to do with any proceeding before the legislature and had left that matter to the officers of the state hospital who had made such recommendations and requests of the legislature as they saw fit. That Mr McNab had stated in the beginning of the negotiations that he would not vote on the matter or be a party to it in any way owing to the fact that he was a manager of the hospital as well as a stockholder in the vineyard association and that he had maintained this attitude at all times and had left the matter in the hands of the agents of the property and the executive officers of the hospital.

Mr Poage stated that he regretted it, if the representatives of this county had been inadvertantly overlooked by the hospital authoritses in presenting the matter to the legislature, as it appears to have been presented by Mr Martinelli, for many years one of the managers of the institution, and he believed that if Senatar Sanford knew just what was desired to be done with this water he would have no objection to the transaction as he has always been a good friend of the hospital, during his term in the legislature, and that any one familiar with the conditions would see the importance of the state acquiring this valuable water right.

It can also be said that in 1894 the state wanted to divert this water to the vegetable garden. The Bartletts carried the matter into court and it was decided that the water right belonged to to this piece of land which certainly established the fact that this water right has a value.

Bernard Saunders came down from Laytonville the first of the week where he has been doing some photographic work. He reports the snow fall to be heavy up there and especially on the stock ranges farther north.

Mr ana Mrs A McNamer were down from Willits the first of the week.

Miss Hazel Rice, who recently graduated from Mrs Porterfield's normal with high honors has accepted a school at Galloway, near Point Arena, and will leave Saturday for that place to commence teaching Monday.

Mrs Edwin Daggett died at Point Arena, January 16.

PRESS ADVERTISING PRODUCES RESULTS

The efficiency of the Republican Press as an advertising medium was proven conclusively in the recent name contest for the new size Fisher cigar. The ad containing the coupon was run for two weeks in the Republican Press, the Times and the Dispatch. The result was one hundred and five answers four of which were sent by letter not using the coupon but two of them stated that they had seen the ad in the Press.

Fifty-six of the coupons were clipped from the Press, twenty-nine from the Times and sixteen from the Dispatch. When the judges had selected the winning name "King Fisher," it was found that four people had sugggested the same name Two of the winners had clipped their coupons from the Press and one each from the other papers.

This contest was an impartial test of the advertising value of the newspapers of Ukiah and the showing made by the Press of furnishing more than twice as many answers to the ad as both of our contemporaries combined is no small source of satisfaction to us. When you have anything to advertise remember that the paper that brings you results is the one that will make advertising pay. Remember that it is not the amount of space that you get for the money that counts but the result that you get from the ad.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS BANQUET FAMILIES

Ukiah Lodge Number 213, Knights of Pythias did themselves proud Wednesday night at the public installation at which the wives and families of the members were invited guests. Determined to do the things up brown Simpson's orchestra was secured for the occasion and furnished music during the installation ceremonies and gave a concert while the guests were waiting for the turkey to be served.

About ten o'clock nearly one hundred retired to the banquet room to the strains of the orchestra, led by Judge and Mrs J M Mannon. Gene Holbrook and Doctor Stout, the committee on refreshments, had secured some of Eli Jones Potter valley turkeys which had been corn fed for the occasion and beautifully browned by Mrs Duncan. There was also plenty of cakes and other good things.

Judge Mannon acted as toastmaster and the time passed merrily till after twelve. The occasion was a very delightful one on account of the presence of the ladies and the boys have decided that there will be no more stag banquets for them.

"I want to show you a strange inscription." Cagle drew a key from his pocket and turned toward a narrow gate in the wall. Brewster hesitated a moment.

"This is a peculiar hour at which to come here," he said.

"I hope you do not fear me?"

"Not in the least."

Cagle opened the gate, and the two made their way among the intricate windings of the walkways to a tomb covered by a plain slab.

Here Cagle struck a match, for the moonlight was not sufficient, and Brewster read:

"The body that lies here was the habitation of a great soul. It held a brain capable of stupendous employments. But it yielded to vicious appetites. What should have been kept as a sanctum became the receptacle of alcohol. The brain that might have planned cities fell to the service of the gambler, and the hand that might have built nobly, an assassin, liberated this soul."

The match had burned out, and the dim shadows of surrounding foliage fell back to their places on the tomb. Brewster gazed for a moment upon the slab now splotched with the shade of ivy leaves, then turned away.

"He was a good boy," fell from the lips of Cagle in a meditative tone, following the younger man toward the gate.

"Where will you alight?"

The return drive had been made in silence, and Brewster had laid his hand upon his companion's shoulder. "I am going home," he added.

The cab had stopped where the light of the Gilded Ball fell into the street.

"Won't you come in and have something?" asked the older man as he got out.

"Not tonight." And Brewster shrugged his shoulders.

Like an ogre nursing a victim for sacrifice, Cagle kept watch for Brewster and took him in tow on every occasion. He steered him past every temptation by bringing to his view object lessons in the results of vice and dissipation.

One day he insisted that Brewster should visit Ward's island with him to see a friend. They entered a ward in the asylum there where wrecks of alcohol found safe keeping.

"Your friend has been going through one of his tantrums," remarked an attendant as he led the way to a padded cell.

In a few moments Brewster was gazing upon a thing that once had been the perfect form of a human being and the tenement of an intelligent soul.

"You say he was a friend of yours?"

They had turned away from the door, and Cagle answered:

"Yes, a friend and a man of fine qualifications, but an idler."

Brewster stooped to pick up a slip of paper at his feet.

"What is this?" he asked.

"Some of that patient's writings," volunteered the attendant.

Brewster read, "An idler is an enemy to himself and a menace to society."

He stopped and reread the words thoughtfully. "It is the truth," he murmured under his breath.

But Cagle caught the words, and a smile of satisfaction slipped from the tail of his eye.

Beyond the gates Cagle turned abruptly to his companion.

"Brewster, what are you doing these days in the way of employment for your time?"

"Nothing, absolutely nothing, and that is what has started me on the road to ruin."

"A friend of mine is in pressing need of a secretary, and I think you would suit him. The salary would be worth your while if you're not above"—

"I loved him, son!"

"Hang the salary; it's the work I need. You have come into my life at a most opportune time for me, somehow, and brought me around to my senses. At any rate, my mother has begun to look happy again, and you're the cause of it, though I don't quite know how you have done it."

Cagle had turned away his head, and a look that mingled pleasure and pain passed over his features.

Within a few months after Brewster had entered upon his duties he was recognized as a coming business man of the highest qualifications. Cagle had dropped back into the old ruts, a game here and a game there for the sake of the sport, philosophizing quietly and watching with half hearted interest the procession of humanity. Occasionally he would pass the home where Brewster lived and glance at the name on the doorplate. Occasionally Brewster thought of Cagle, and he recognized the tremendous service the latter had done him. And it was not strange that he should think of Cagle as he lay one day on his back at a hospital a crushed and bleeding form, the result of a trolley accident

He sent for Cagle, but no one could find a man of that name. The directory did not give it. No one among the haunts that Brewster named knew it. He then described the man minutely, and a messenger was sent out. A man answering the description was found, and the messenger approached him.

"Are you Dent Cagle?" was asked.

"Why do you ask?"

"A man named Brewster, who is seriously hurt"—

"You may call me Cagle. Where is the boy?"

"I will take you to him."

As Cagle entered the ward where Brewster lay he paused at sight of a woman who sat beside the cot. Deeply concerned, her eyes were watching the face of her son. But the patient had caught sight of the visitor, and he murmured eagerly:

"Cagle!"

Margaret Brewster arose quickly and turned to meet the man who had done so much for her son. Then, suddenly, she bowed her head and held out her hand gently toward the visitor.

"Not Cagle," she said, "but Hugh—Hugh Morrison."

Cagle, or Morrison, took the hand that was offered him and covered it gently with his free hand, too full for utterance with the emotion of an old love that still burned in his heart.

"You saved me from a pretty bad life, Cagle," began Brewster from the cot, "and I just wanted to thank you for it— What! Why, you two seem to know each other. How is this?"

Allowing Morrison to keep his hold of her hand, she leaned forward and whispered:

"I loved him, son, before I met your father."

A gleam of satisfaction shot from the boy's eyes, preceding an expression of agony which came as he sought to turn himself.

Morrison placed his hand upon the young man's forehead and said:

"The first time I saw you, boy, I recognized that strong resemblance to your mother, and the smoldering ruin of the old love leaped into flame again."

AN ANTARCTIC STORM

Braving the Perils of a South Polar Winter's Night.

FIERCE FURY OF THE GALE.

Adventures of a Party of Explorers In a Journey Over the Broken Pack Ice—The Solid Wall of Wind That Flanked a Friendly Iceberg.

The arctic explorer has always had hardship and danger enough, but the antarctic discoverer has far more terrible conditions to meet. Luckily he meets them with all the equipment and method that arctic exploration has taught mankind. Yet they are most dangerous, as the story of those who have lived through the south polar winter night can testify. One of the experiences of Bernacchi on the cruise of the Southern Cross some years ago shows what an antarctic gale means.

He and a comrade, Ellifsen, started out on a short sledge journey to carry provisions from one camp to another. It was in September, and the broken ice pack over which they must travel was but a foot and a half thick and likely to break in pieces afresh or pile up in deadly masses at the mercy of the sea and wind. The two men had three sledges and eighteen dogs. They had hardly started before the wind rose and a gale threatened. Halfway to their destination there was an iceberg imbedded in the pack ice, and they hastened to reach this before the storm should break.

For five hours they toiled over the ice, the wind gradually rising. The gale broke in fury just as they reached the iceberg, under whose lee they pitched a tiny silk tent, into which they crawled after having fed their dogs as best they could. Hour after hour the wind raged, and the thermometer went to [illegible] degrees below zero. The snow drifted over and into the tent. Sleep was impossible.

The explorers, who had met typhoons in the China seas and cyclones in the tropics, found by the aneroid as well as by their own sensations that this gale surpassed them all. Worst of all, it seemed as if the ice was beginning to crack. They knew well that the iceberg which protected them from the full force of the storm was the most dangerous place possible in other ways, as the ice was sure to separate first immediately round the berg, throwing tent, men and dogs into the icy seas. The cracking of ice was now to be heard above the roar of the wind. They dared not stay in their shelter.

A little to the east, Bernacchi remembered, was a cave in the body of the iceberg, [illegible] that they would not at least be precipitated into the sea, even if they were carried away, iceberg and all. It was so dark that the wall of ice could not be seen even when the hand touched it. The two explorers groped as best they could along the slippery walls, both hands on the ice and their bodies pressed against it. Halfway around they felt the ice slid [illegible] the gale. It [illegible] solid [illegible], bearing them back and down. Not one inch could they move against it, and further exposure meant death. They groped [illegible] and almost paralyzed with cold, to shelter. Then they commenced a toilsome hunt for a foothold on the lee side somewhere. Toward morning they found a low spur or projection, upon which they scrambled and lay down perfectly exhausted in the snowdrifts, which grew each moment. To this they owed their lives, for the snow soon covered them and kept in the warmth of their bodies.

They dared not sleep for fear of never waking, so they roused each other alternately. At last day broke, and the gale abated. Crawling over the snow, their garments frozen stiff as boards, their beards solid lumps of ice, they managed to reach their tent. The ice had not broken, though it was cracked here and there. They took food, slept, fed their dogs, who were deep in the drifts, but alive, and then courageously went ahead, "not caring to be beaten," as Bernacchi expressed it. It was 8 o'clock at night before they reached camp, but the next day they were exploring and taking photographs and observations just as usual. Man may seem puny against nature, but he conquers her from the arctic to the antarctic by his unconquerable soul.—William Rittenhouse in Forward.

New Reos Are Great Machines

Lester Cox, manager of the Ukiah garage and machine shop, has taken advantage of the few days of clear weather and has had their 1909 Reo demonstrating machine out trying it Besides being well built it shows great speed and a person out on the road would not have to take dust from any of the automobiles. It also shows great climbing power. On one of the steepest hills around here he stopped it at the bottom and then threw it into the high gear and went up the hill as easy as most machines would have pulled it up on the low. The Reo, without a doubt, is the best low priced machine put on the market.

SHERWOOD, Jan 23—After a three weeks rainstorm we are having a little diversion by way of a splendid snowstorm. Snow is now five and six inches deep and more to follow. Can't say how deep it will be by the time the storm ceases. Mother Nature looks most beautiful in her lovely white robe but we prefer less beauty and more comfort. Icicles eight and nine inches long hang from the eaves all round the houses.

We are glad that the train has been able to make another trip to Sherwood. Hope no more bad slides occur.

For awhile Sherwood has been like an oasis in a desert and separated from the outside world. We make no complaints however as other places have suffered a far worse fate than ours

A few of our friends are making themselves snow shoes, trying to imitate the Laplanders. What need have the people to strive any longer for the north pole since it seems to be coming right down to us?

Nelson Endicott, of Willits, has been visiting at the home of Mrs Nellie Sherwood this week. Nelson is one of Mr Joyce's pupils and is a very bright boy. We enjoyed his visit.

Ira Ordway, in spite of bad weather, took a nice band of cattle from Lane's ranch to Alpine this week. His brother Ed had taken a band of cattle a few days before that. When it comes to work the Ordway Bros are hard to beat. We are always glad to see them for they are also like walking newspapers and can give us all the news.

As soon as fair weather comes and the roads are so we can traverse them, some of us intend starting for Ukiah as we think that place is a little nearer Heaven than this is. Climate is all right but it is like people, all kinds, and some kinds are good and some are not so good. Nothing is more uncertain than human nature and climate. EUREKA.

HOPLAND, Jan 23—B Morrison who has been in the employ of Frank Dooley for several years past has gone to ranching.

Mrs M Seavy and daughter Janice of San Francisco has been visiting Mrs Kitty Clendenin this week.

George Williams of San Francisco has been spending his vacation with J Clendenin.

Mrs Frank Dooley has been visiting her sister at Preston.

Miss M Foster of San Rafael has been entertaining a few of her friends at the Foster ranch for the past week.

C Leek and daughter returned from their southern trip a few days ago.

Mrs E Dooley of Penn's Grove has been visiting Miss E Hunt at the Brookside for a few days.

CUPID'S ARROW SCORES DOUBLE

One of the prettiest weddings that ever occurred in Ukiah was that of Grover Clark and Miss Nellie Chessall, and Earl Gibson and Miss Lilly Heryford at the Christian church at noon last Sunday, Rev Wilkison performing the double ceremony. At the conclusion of the morning service the bridal party entered, the bridegrooms and their attendants approaching from the rear of the building, preceded by the minister, and taking their places at the head of the aisles, while the brides, each supported by her father and accompanied by the bridesmaids, approached from the front of the building to where the grooms were in waiting. With beauty and grace every step was measured by the sweet strains of the wedding march, played by Mrs Nellie Gibson, with violin obligato by Chas Blessing of San Francisco. The ceremony was short and impressive and at its conclusion the delightful harmony of the wedding march was taken up and the bridal party retired to the Christian endeavor room where they received the congratulations of many friends and sat down to a sumptuous repast with eighty invited guests, relatives and most intimate friends of the contracting parties. The happy couples were compelled to leave early to catch the 1:30 train for the city. They were the recipients of many useful and beautiful presents from relatives far and near. A "shower party" was given the prospective brides by the Loyal Sons and Loyal Daughters of the Christian Sunday school, at the home of Kate Gibson, Thursday evening of last week at which time they received various gifts.

Jack Hyde was assistant to Mr Gibson, and Miss Mary Kinloch was maid for Miss Heryford. William Chessall supported Mr Clark, and Miss York was maid for Miss Chessall. The brides were beautifully and becomingly dressed in white, carrying white carnations, while the grooms wore the usual black. Mr Clark and Mr Gibson both have positions as brakemen on the Northwestern Pacific and are deservedly popular with all the railroad boys on the line. As a consequence the trip down the line was one continual ovation, with generous showers of rice as an expression of good-wishes. Both couples have been raised in Ukiah where they have many friends who wish them happiness and best wishes through out their life. After spending their honeymoon in the southern part of the state they will go to Willits where they will make their home in the future.

Neat Printing Brings Results

When you send out some printed matter regarding your store or business, what kind do you want? some that is all daubed up with ink and printed in about fourteen different kinds of type, or do you want it to be neat, well printed, and really a credit to your store? You can get either right here in Ukiah. When you want to drive away trade and send out something that will do you more harm than good, take your printing to the other fellow; but when you want the neat work, the kind that everyone likes to see and read, bring your work to The Republican Press. You may ask why you should do this to get good work. Because, The Press has the best and highest paid printers in town. They know what to do and how to do it, and are just as anxious to please you as you are to be pleased with your work. One trial is all we ask. You will know then for yourself.

Don't forget the parade of the Uncle Tom company. A genuine Negro band.

TIMBER SALES FROM NATIONAL FORESTS

WASHINGTON, Jan 25—Uncle Sam's national forests yielded an increase of 102 per cent in timber last year over the record for 1907, giving returns of $849,027.24 to the government Twenty-five per cent of this amount went back to the states in which the forests are located in lieu of taxes, in accordance with the provisions of the law. This revenue will be added to the state's fund for the support and maintenance of roads and public schools. The amount of timber cut from all the National Forests was 392,792,000 feet, board measure, as against 194,872,000 feet in the previous year. This figure for 1908 does not include the 131,482,000 feet given away to settlers, schools and churches under "free use" permits. This increase of 102 per cent shows a far better use and increasing productiveness of the forest under conservative methods of cutting. There was a marked increase in small sales last year, resulting in an increase of 236 per cent in the number of sales, notwithstanding the fact the timber contracted for was far less in the aggregate than in 1907.

In making timber sales the forest service seeks small in preference to large sales, and aims to safeguard a supply for future needs rather than to swell the immediate receipts. Were it desired, the present receipts from timber sales could be quickly doubled. During the year it was found necessary in the interest of a continued supply to restrict sales on many forests. Nevertheless, use of the national forests as a source of timber supply was more general than ever before. The total receipts from timber sales each year have been as follows: 195, $60,136.62; 1906, $245,013.49; 1907, $668,813.12; 1908, $849,027.24.

Payment for timber is always required in advance. In large sales, however, and in small sales on occasion, payment is made in installments so arranged as to protect the government against loss without imposing unnecessarily severe burdens upon the purchaser. Thus the receipts of each year represent substantially, but not exactly, the value of the timber sold and removed during that year.
